

Friedlander Disc Golf

Disc golf is a game similar to traditional golf but played with a frisbee-like disc instead of clubs and a ball. The objective is to complete each hole in the fewest throws possible, with targets consisting of metal baskets mounted on poles.

Here's a brief overview of how to play:

Starting Position: Stand behind the designated tee area for the hole you're playing.

Throwing: Each player takes turns throwing their disc toward the target. The player with the least number of throws on the previous hole goes first.

Advancing: After each throw, players move to where their disc landed and throw again from there until the disc is successfully thrown into the target.

Scoring: The number of throws it takes to get the disc into the target is recorded for each player. The player with the lowest total score at the end of the round wins.

Obstacles and Challenges: Courses are designed with various obstacles such as trees, bushes, and terrain changes to add challenge and strategy to the game.

Etiquette: Like traditional golf, disc golf has etiquette rules to ensure fair play and safety. This includes letting faster groups play through, not distracting other players, and respecting the course and its surroundings.

Keep your camp beautiful. Pick up litter as you play

Course Rules:

1. No stepping on an opponent's disc
2. You must count all throws
3. Throws must be taken from within 3ft of where the disc lands
4. Golfers must play around any program area that is in session
5. Discs that land in an active program area are out of bounds and subject to a 2 throw penalty
6. To complete a hole you must either hit the pole or post, or land the disc within 3 feet of the hole
7. All golfers must behave in a scout-like manner, but trash talking and trying to distract the shooter is encouraged
8. Concrete pavers are placed in close proximity to each basket as tees, marking where to throw for the next hole. Do not step over the tee when throwing.
